

SPOTLIGHT ON:

Sapwell's Suspended Floor Insulation

Whilst studying for plumbing exams Barry Sapwell noticed how cold the floor in his Victorian house was. Research showed him that there are about 6.5 million UK homes in need of insulation of some sort, be that in loft, the walls or the ground floor.

Barry insulated his floorboards and was pleased to experience both an increase in comfort and a reduction in fuel bills, and set about building his floor insulation business.

Over the past 4 years he has insulated the ground floors of dozens of Victorian and Edwardian homes across Milton Keynes and London. Most homes that have floorboards can be insulated, not just Victorian and Edwardian houses.

There are two main methods of installing the insulation: from above the floor or from below the floor. The actual method used depends on the depth of the crawl space under the floor.

Sometimes whilst under the floor old artefacts are found. Recently whilst under the floor of a house in Wolverton an old cigarette packet was found. After a bit of research it was found that this type of cigarette pack was only given to soldiers returning from the Western Front during WW1. Lego, marbles, jewellery, old newspapers, letters, post cards, credit cards, bottles and money have all been found under floors and handed to the home owner. It can be a messy job but the benefits out way the short term inconvenience by a long way.

Customers who elect to have floor insulation installed fall into at least one of three groups: 1. those that desire a warmer, draught free home, 2. Those that desire a reduced energy bill, and 3: those that wish to lessen their impact on the environment.

All surveys and advice are free, and during the colder months Barry can bring along a thermal imaging camera so that you can actually see where your home has cold spots.

Sapwell's are proud to be a member of the MK "Buy With Confidence" scheme, operated by Trading Standards.
